My Grandfather's Mandarin Tree is a gentle picture book about a child's first encounter with loss, change, and remembrance.

As Judi cares for the flowers in her family's garden, she learns that everything in nature has a cycle. Through the metaphor of wilting plants, growing roses, and a mandarin tree planted by her grandfather, the story offers a tender way to talk about death, not as an ending, but as a transformation into love and memories.

The mandarin tree becomes a living bridge between generations, helping Judi understand that those we love stay with us through the bonds and memories they leave behind.

At bedtime, Tina asks her father to read her favorite fairy tales. But as the familiar stories unfold, something keeps her awake: the heroines don't even have names, and they always seem to wait for a prince to save them. Tina questions these old patterns and boldly imagines new possibilities; stories where heroes are named, girls make their own choices, and adventures can happen anywhere, even in outer space. Encouraged by her father, Tina realizes that fairy tales are not fixed or untouchable. They are living worlds she can enter, reshape, and retell. With a notebook, colorful pencils, and an unstoppable imagination, Tina becomes a Story Wanderer; a child who jumps into stories, writes her own adventures, and finds her own path. Warm, playful, and empowering, Tina the Story Wanderer celebrates creativity, independent thinking, and the joy of storytelling. It invites young readers to question what they read, trust their imagination, and discover that they, too, can rewrite the tales they inherit.

Monsters Have Feelings Too!

Monsters Have Feelings Too! addresses empathy, emotional awareness, and acceptance of differences. Monsters, contrary to their outward appearance, feel human emotions such as love, fear, and happiness, which teaches children to accept others without judgment. The book helps develop emotional intelligence and encourages children to express their emotions. It strength-

Monsters Are Kind Too!

Monsters Are Kind Too! teaches children social values such as politeness, empathy, and respect. It emphasizes how kind and thoughtful monsters can be despite their appearance, thereby teaching children that judging others based on their appearance is wrong. The book also teaches fundamental life skills such as effective communication, cooperation, and teamwork.

On his first day at Toilet Paper School, Tuvi is excited to meet new friends, until he realizes everyone else has bold penguin or elephant designs, while he has none. Left out of games and seats because he doesn't "match," Tuvi keeps trying to join in, even as classmates whisper that maybe he isn't toilet paper at all. On graduation day, the rolls toss their last sheets and are left as simple brown cores; no penguins, no elephants, no labels. Then everyone notices something extraordinary: Tuvi's core is covered in hearts. With a bright smile, Tuvi reminds them that you don't need a pattern to enjoy the sun, watch the birds, or be a friend, and he shares a wonderful idea. The class transforms into a single connected train, with Tuvi as the locomotive, showing that true friendship is a "Diversity Train" made stronger by every unique car. A gentle story with humor and heart, Tuvi's Patterns invites children to question exclusion, celebrate differences, and discover that kindness is the best pattern of all.

This story is about embracing our shadow sides and all aspects of our personality. Children have no shadows as their personalities develop. Shadows begin to form as children adapt to society. The shadow prevents them from using certain traits of their personality that could be functionally useful. For example, being rude, being angry, saying no, objecting, setting boundaries. However, our personality is a whole, and all these shadow aspects need to be expressed appropriately. The story has a healing effect on the reader by explaining how to integrate all aspects of personality, especially our shadow sides, through the dialogue between Black and White.

Love is building bridges between our differences.

How do you show your love to a flower, a cat, an ant, or a human? And what if, like Sara, your language of love cannot be understood by everyone? What would you do to show your love?

Sara is a special child who speaks with her hands and listens with her eyes. Her little brother searches for a unique way to show how much he loves her big sister, and along the way he discovers various ways to express his love.

This emotional journey teaches him the power of connection, both in Sara's language and in his own. And have you ever thought, what is your language of love?

These books enable direct access to concepts and achievements that support children's cognitive, social, emotional and motor skills development. The goal of the first series is to help children express their imaginative and abstract thoughts. In the Series of Concept, the author focused on Line, Sound, and Colour. This series has sold more than 50.000 copies and translated into more than 15 different languages since its publication.

A Line: "I love drawing lines. I draw thin lines, thinner lines, and even thinner lines. Sometimes I draw thick lines, colorful lines, or short lines. In my imagination, I see triangles, squares, houses, and so many other things... So, what can you do with a line?"

A Color: "I love colors very much. I create clouds, forests, and cities in different colors. Sometimes I imagine colorful squirrels living in trees, birds gliding through the clouds, or frogs jumping in lakes. So, what can you do with a color?"

A Sound: "I love sounds. I enjoy listening to all kinds of sounds everywhere. I try to imitate every sound I hear. Splish splash, rustle, gurgle, woof woof... So, what sounds do you like?"

The Series of Senses explore how sensory development expands as children begin to observe and describe the world using their five sensory organs. These abstract concepts, often hard to express in words, are made tangible, fun, and memorable.

A Smell: From the sweet and comforting smell of books to the fresh and soothing scent of lush green forests, children learn how smells are linked to memories and emotions.

A Touch: From the prickly cactus to soft flower petals, rough tree bark to smooth ice, A Touch introduces children to the textures that shape our environment and invites them to explore their own surroundings through touching.

A Taste: From the zing of sour lemons to the cozy warmth of a hug, A Taste gently introduces the five basic tastes; sweet, salty, sour, bitter, and umami, while celebrating the emotional and cultural connections we form with food. Blending sensory discovery with imagination.

In the bustling House of Extremes, every resident is larger than life, and completely unpredictable! There's Lazy, the overworked superintendent who naps anywhere he can; Chatterbox, who talks so much her phone leaves a mark on her ear; Lightning, who bakes cakes at jet speed; Dreamer, whose wild ideas range from flying balloons on the roof to a cockroach football team; Noise, whose music, cleaning, and drumming drive everyone crazy; Clumsy, who seems to break everything in sight; and Grumpy, who's always ready to argue. When daily chaos overwhelms them, the residents demand a meeting with Lazy. But even then, the eccentric conflicts and comic mishaps continue, until a surprising solution arrives for each neighbor, bringing harmony back to the apartment. With its colorful cast, playful humor, and inventive solutions, The Apartment of Extremes celebrates creativity, empathy, and the joy of finding ways to live together despite differences.

In the Land of Potatoes, a beauty contest was held every year. Starch's mother signed her up for it, and Starch finds herself chosen as a contestant. But she didn't want to be queen! Trying to impress the judges made her feel strange and uncomfortable. She pleaded with her family, but it didn't help. So she started asking bold questions. What is beauty? And why does it matter so much? Who gets to decide if someone is beautiful? The more she asked, the more things got complicated, because no one really knew the answers. Let's take a moment to think about the judges in our own lives. Why do we give so much power to those who judge and evaluate us based on how we look, our height, our weight, our appearance?

Starch thought about all this, and decided she wouldn't give that power to anyone.

I'm Tomato, and I have a very big secret to share with you. I'm not actually a vegetable... I'm a fruit! Just like apples and pears. Surprised? So was I. Everything started in the magical Land of Refrigerator, where I found myself on an unexpected adventure with my best friend Cucumber, the wildly imaginative Half-Lemon, and a group of brave and loyal friends. Together, we faced off against the fearsome Great Pasta Monster, who had eighteen arms and thirty-eight legs, and tomato sauce dripping from his mouth! As the story unfolds, our heroes question everything they've been told about who they are. With the help of the wise Council of Elder Olives, they come to understand that what truly matters is not what others call you, but how you feel inside.

Tina is a book-loving girl whose vivid imagination turns her into a "Story Wanderer," freely moving between the worlds of her favorite tales. Encouraged by her father to follow stories as guides rather than rules, Tina approaches every adventure with curiosity and confidence. On her way to deliver a cake to her grandfather's lakeside home in the forest, Tina encounters three very unusual wolves: a perpetually grumpy one, a vegetarian who refuses to eat meat, and a gentle giant who sees the world through rose-colored glasses. Instead of fearing them, Tina befriends them. When the wolves' mischievous behavior leads to trouble at Grandpa's house, Tina uses wit, empathy, and courage to restore order, teaching lessons about honesty, sharing, and responsibility along the way. A playful, modern reimagining of a classic fairy-tale structure, the book presents a heroine who does not wait to be rescued but shapes her own story. With humor, warmth, and empowerment at its core, Tina's adventure invites young readers to rethink "villains," celebrate imagination, and approach the world with kindness, while opening the door to an ongoing series of new stories and worlds.

This is the Land of the Dreams. Here, everything follows the rules. Looking up at the sky, slowing down, and being different are frowned upon. People don't stray from their familiar paths; they walk without thinking. Lori begins to search for her own path in this world. With every step she takes to find her light, she faces voices, fears, and thoughts that try to stop her. Sometimes she walks alone, sometimes with others; she falls, stops, tries again. The road is long, but the sky is still there. This story, which accompanies every child in discovering their inner strength and supports emotional well-being, is the first stop in the "The Land of Dreams" series.

Keeping secrets in Witch Village is impossible. Except for the ancient secret of the handmade flying broom! But Witch Fish Bone is determined to uncover that secret. When Witch Fish Bone turned nine, her only dream was to own the sparkling, dazzling, pink glitter broom in the shop window. Despite her family's objections, she insisted on buying that expensive broom. In the early days, she became quite popular at school with her glittery broom. But as she grew older, that fancy broom became a subject of ridicule and lost its value in Kılçık's eyes. Since she couldn't afford a new one until she got her broom driver's license, she needed to find a solution to this problem urgently. Then one day, she saw the handmade antique broom that Fancy Remziye rode on when she returned to the village, and he made up his mind right then and there. Since she couldn't buy a new one, she would make one herself. However, making a broom in the strange magical chaos of Witch Village was not easy at all...

Once upon a time, Solenta was a land of light and sunshine. Then one day, the sun disappeared. Silence descended upon the city. Fog settled in. Colors faded. In a world where smiling, thinking, and even singing were forbidden, people became trapped inside their own shadows; obedient, efficient, and profoundly alone. And then, after many years, hope appeared.

It emerged as a pair of blue eyes in the sky. It spoke through the roots of a tree, the memory of a seed, the whisper of a mother. Its voice echoed beneath the ground like the heartbeat of a forgotten world.

The Children of Solenta is not a beginning, nor an ending. It is the story of a cycle; written exactly at the intersection of dystopia and utopia, where nature remembers what people have been taught to forget, and children sense truths adults no longer dare to feel.

Through a hidden garden, living trees, inherited memories, and quiet acts of courage, the story asks a powerful question: What if growing up does not mean forgetting, but remembering?

Super Team is a third-book series and each story addresses issues that children may face in everyday life and invites them to be part of the solution. These books are not just stories; they are also guides that foster co-operation, responsibility and imagination. Super Team aims to support children to become more sensitive to their environment and solution-oriented individuals.
