The Land of Buried Dreams

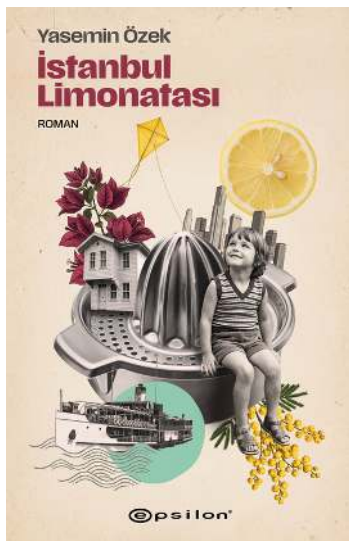

Kasım Hasan Ünal

Literary Fiction / 352 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Nemesis

The Land of Buried Dreams is a haunting literary novel where memory, guilt, faith, and imagination become inseparable. Haunted by the childhood death of his younger brother and unable to sleep for seven years, Efraim struggles to escape a tightly knit religious neighborhood fractured by political divisions, buried secrets, and competing myths. As a stray dog regarded by many residents as a blessed guardian, is brutally murdered and suspicion spreads through the community, his search for freedom leads him into a world where photography, love, storytelling, and dreams offer the only refuge from reality. Drawing on the rich traditions of Ottoman and Persian miniatures, Sufi storytelling, and modern Turkish literature, including echoes of Ahmet Hamdi Tanpınar's A Mind at Peace (Huzur), The Land of Buried Dreams is an immersive literary work that explores how individuals and societies survive through the stories they inherit, create, and conceal. It is the story of a man trying to survive the past, and of a community struggling to reconcile the myths it lives by with the truths it would rather forget.

Kasım Hasan Ünal (b. 1988) is a Turkish novelist, screenwriter, and filmmaker. His films were screened at Sarajevo Factory, The Lift-Off Sessions Manchester and shortlisted for the European Union's short film competition on discrimination. His stage play Ekmek Arası İnkılap (Revolution Between Bread Slices) received an award from the Turkish Ministry of Culture in 2017. While his short films have been recognized at both national and international festivals, he has published literary biographies and essays on some of Turkey's most influential literary figures. He has also worked as an editor for Hayy Kitap and Athica Publishing. He lives in Istanbul, where he continues his work in literature and cinema.

Istanbul Lemonade

Yasemin Özek

Literary Fiction / 336 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Epsilon

Dario's life unravels after his wife, Liana, discovers that he has cheated on her for the first time in their twenty-four-year relationship. The revelation throws both of them into crisis. Dario is consumed not only by guilt over betraying the woman he loves and the family they built together, but also by confusion about his own identity. He struggles to understand whether the encounter was a fleeting exception, a long-suppressed truth, or something in between. Dario finds himself trapped between two versions of himself: the devoted husband and father he has always been, and a newly awakened side he cannot explain or control.

Running parallel to the present-day collapse of Dario's marriage is the story of his past. Through memories stretching from his childhood in 1970s Istanbul to his teenage years on Büyükada, the novel reveals the emotional foundations of the man he became. We witness his parents' troubled marriage, his father's infidelity and eventual departure, and the loneliness and confusion those events left behind. These memories cast a long shadow over the present: as Dario fears becoming the very source of pain he once suffered, he confronts the possibility that his own family may now be repeating a cycle he spent a lifetime trying to escape. Spanning three decades and moving between contemporary America and the Istanbul of the 1970s and 1980s, the novel is equally a love letter to a vanished world. Through vivid memories of Büyükada - the largest of Istanbul's Princes' Islands - readers are immersed in long summer evenings by the sea, bicycle rides beneath pine trees, ferry journeys across the Bosphorus, family gatherings, music-filled social clubs, and the multicultural fabric of a city where Turkish, Jewish, Levantine, and Mediterranean traditions intertwined.

Yasemin Özek (b. 1980) is an Istanbul-born novelist and screenwriter, and a former documentary producer. After a successful career writing for television, she turned to fiction with her debut novel My Despina, was published in both Turkey and Greece, where it reached readers on both sides of the Aegean and was featured in the centenary commemorations of the Population Exchange with the support of the Greek Ministry of Culture. Her novels, known for their emotionally rich storytelling and their exploration of memory, identity, and shared cultural heritage, continue to reach Greek readers through new translations.

Kardelen

Aşkın Kapaşmak

Crime Fiction / 208 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Nemesis

When twenty-five-year-old Kardelen is found brutally murdered in a rented flat in Cihangir, Chief Inspector Rıfat Tezcan is confronted with a meticulously staged crime scene and a mysterious copper necklace bearing nine symbols of Diyarbakır. As the investigation leads from Istanbul's marginalised streets to an influential family in the southeast, the case begins to echo a tragedy buried deep in Rıfat's own past, threatening both his judgement and his grip on reality. Alternating between the murder investigation in 2024 and Kardelen's childhood, the novel gradually reveals the life behind the victim: orphaned at an early age, raised as an invisible servant in a wealthy household and subjected to years of abuse, she finds refuge in books and the courage to imagine escape. Combining a psychologically layered police procedural with a powerful story of survival, Kardelen explores violence against women, childhood trauma, inherited guilt and the devastating consequences of collective silence.

Aşkın Kapaşmak (b. 1979) is a Turkish author and behavioural science expert whose work focuses on psychology, communication and human relationships. He has delivered seminars and presentations in 26 countries, appeared as a television host, and worked as a communication consultant for individuals, institutions and senior executives. His fiction, including Unread Message and Kardelen, draws on his professional background to explore trauma, hidden desires and the darker complexities of human behaviour.

The City I Left Behind is a Lover Who Spreads Trouble

Ashlı Tunç

Literary Fiction – Short Story Collection / 184 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Epsilon

The City I Left Behind is a Lover Who Spreads Trouble brings together nine evocative stories set across Florence, Barcelona, Amsterdam, Istanbul, Paris, Rome, Dubai, and Lesbos, before concluding in a place beyond all maps. Blending romance, memory, loss, longing, and magical realism, the collection transforms each city into a living presence, at once a witness, a confidant, and a troublesome lover impossible to forget. Encounters that blur the boundaries between past and present, dream and reality, lead its characters through unfinished love affairs, buried secrets, unexpected reckonings, and moments of fleeting connection, revealing how deeply the places we leave behind continue to inhabit us.

Ashlı Tunç (b. 1980) is a writer, translator, and publishing professional whose articles have appeared in various magazines and newspapers. She is the author of the short-story collection The City I Left Behind Is a Lover Who Spreads Trouble and the novel The Soundtrack of Life. At This Age

Toprak Işık

Literary Fiction / 180 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Epsilon

Fifty-five-year-old Güner, a recently retired colonel adjusting to civilian life as a corporate security manager, begins an affair with Ceyda, the company's young and uninhibited new saleswoman, after his confidence in his masculinity is shaken. With his womanising friend Halit acting as adviser and accomplice, supposedly innocent bridge nights become cover for increasingly complicated encounters involving wives, children and colleagues. Yet Ceyda refuses to remain a convenient fantasy, forcing Güner to confront uncomfortable questions about marriage, fidelity and the double standards that excuse men while condemning women.

Driven by sparkling dialogue, comic reversals and sharply observed characters, At This Age is a fast-paced social satire that explores ageing, desire, patriarchal privilege and the loneliness, regrets and fears concealed beneath the pursuit of intimacy.

Looking For A Girl

Toprak Işık

Literary Fiction – Short Story Collection / 264 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Epsilon

Across eight exuberantly comic stories, Looking for a Girl follows men and women navigating love, marriage, family and professional life in a society where everyone seems determined to manage one another's choices. Its memorable characters include a disillusioned research assistant trapped in academic bureaucracy, a philosophy-loving young man resisting the future his father has planned for him, an engineer whose search for a wife is complicated by his mother's expectations, and a father convinced that the midwife determines the sex of his babies. Told through intimate first-person narrators who unwittingly reveal their own vanity, jealousy and contradictions, these stories combine sharp social observation with warmth and audacious humour. Deeply rooted in Turkish life yet universal in their conflicts, the collection explores patriarchal authority, social mobility, family interference, sexual double standards and the pressure to marry without ever reducing its flawed characters to caricatures.

First In Line

Toprak Işık

Literary Fiction – Short Story Collection / 188 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Epsilon

Across eleven keenly observed stories, First in Line follows ordinary people at different stages of life as they struggle to appear disciplined, respectable, successful or simply in control -from a military-school cadet calculating the safest place in a punishment line and a student entrusting his future to a downloaded project to a young woman seeking a new life in Ankara and an unemployed graduate whose family is eager to arrange both his career and marriage. Speaking with unwavering self-confidence, the narrators attempt to justify their vanity, cowardice, jealousy and compromises, only to reveal precisely what they hope to conceal. Moving through military schools, campuses, family homes, workplaces and apartment blocks, this warm and darkly humorous collection offers a vivid panorama of Turkish society while exploring authority, masculinity, ambition, unemployment, family pressure, social status and the tensions between provincial and metropolitan life.

Toprak Işık (b.1973) is an author and electrical engineer who has written more than forty books across children's literature, fiction, theatre and academic research. Known for blending science with humour, he creates entertaining and thought-provoking works that make complex ideas accessible to young readers.

Magic Shop

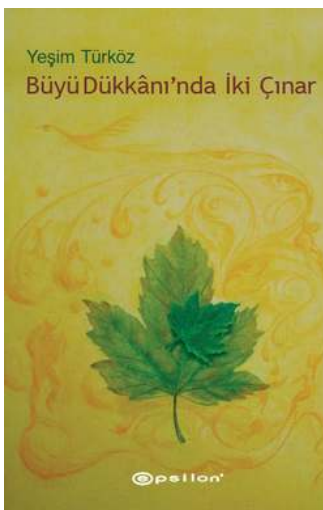

Yeşim Türköz

Literary Fiction / 136 Pages / Published: 2020 / Publisher: Epsilon

An extraordinary shop stands in a secluded valley, offering everything a person could wish for, but accepting no money in return. In The Magic Shop, Yeşim Türköz brings together eight interconnected stories inspired by the “Magic Shop” technique used in psychodrama, a form of psychotherapy. Each encounter unfolds through a bargain between a wise old shopkeeper and a customer seeking something missing from their life. As wishes are questioned and the true cost of each exchange emerges, customers leave with something very different from what they came to find. Blending imaginative storytelling with psychological insight, this collection invites readers to reflect on regret, fear, choice and the delicate relationship between what we desire and what we are prepared to give up.

Two Plane Trees at the Magic Shop

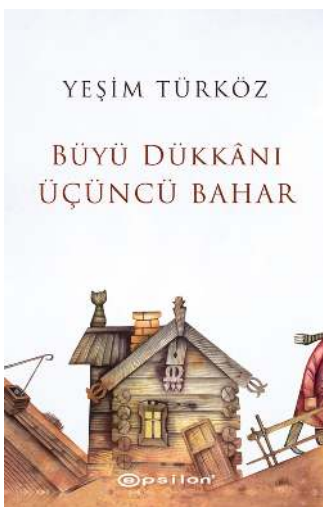

Yeşim Türköz

Literary Fiction / 237 Pages / Published: 2020 / Publisher: Epsilon

The Magic Shop offers everything a person could wish for, but every wish comes at a price. In Two Plane Trees at the Magic Shop, Yeşim Türköz returns to this extraordinary setting, where new customers and challenging bargains draw readers deeper into the elderly shopkeeper's own story. After nearly half a century of solitude, he agrees to care for seven-year-old Çınar while the boy's parents spend a year working abroad. The prospect of companionship awakens long-buried dreams, alongside fears that his wisdom cannot easily quiet. As he keeps helping customers with varying wishes, he must confront his own hopes and vulnerabilities. Inspired by psychodrama's “Magic Shop” technique, this tender blend of imaginative storytelling and psychological insight explores loss, belonging and the bonds through which people of different generations transform one another's lives.

The Magic Shop: The Third Spring

Yeşim Türköz

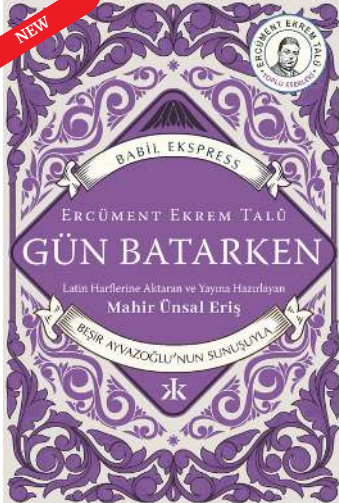

Literary Fiction / 120 Pages / Published: 2021 / Publisher: Epsilon

Can we ever know ourselves completely, and what might we lose if we could? In The Magic Shop: The Third Spring, Yeşim Türköz returns to the extraordinary shop where wishes are exchanged for unexpected prices. After spending several months reconnecting with a long-lost love, the elderly shopkeeper returns to his familiar solitude, only to discover new uncertainties of his own. As he keeps receiving new customers with bold wishes, the shopkeeper comes up with difficult prices to be paid for each of these wishes. Inspired by psychodrama's “Magic Shop” technique, this third volume blends imaginative storytelling with psychological insight, exploring desire, ageing, renewal and the unsettling question of whether what we want most is truly what we seek.

As the Sun Sets

Ercüment Ekrem Talû

Literary Fiction / 148 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Kafka Kitap

Set against the final years of a collapsing empire, As the Sun Sets follows an idealistic soldier serving in the provinces as the turmoil of his age gradually strips him of his principles. Surrounded by pressure to embrace a life of indulgence, he watches honesty, integrity and morality give way to corruption: while impoverished young men sacrifice their lives on the front, newly rich war profiteers pursue luxury without conscience, and those determined to earn an honest living are condemned to a precarious existence. In this incisive novel, the setting sun becomes a powerful metaphor for both the fall of an empire and the defeat of the values upon which it once claimed to stand.

Kafka Kitap brings this major work by Ercüment Ekrem Talû to contemporary readers in the modern Turkish alphabet, alongside two other titles by the author, The Moderns (Asriler) and The Sea Lion (Gemi Arslanı).

The Sea Lion

Literary Fiction / 262 Pages / Published: 2025 / Publisher: Kafka Kitap

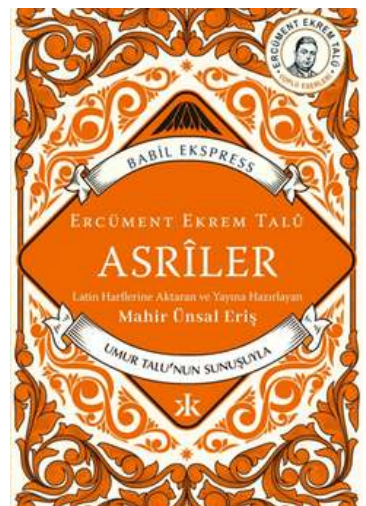

Ercüment Ekrem Talû's classic novel follows Şerefraz Hanım as she struggles to secure a promising future for her orphaned son, Sudi. Set in old Istanbul, the story explores poverty, love, family and social change, while Leman's arrival opens unexpected paths towards happiness. Through vivid neighbourhoods, nuanced characters and masterful prose, Talû captures both an era and its people.

The Moderns

Literary Fiction / 262 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Kafka Kitap

Written during the occupation of Istanbul, The Moderns offers a sharp critique of Westernisation and the abandonment of cultural and moral values. Through his vivid portrayal of a city in crisis, Talû explores the conflict between tradition and modernity while capturing a society undergoing profound transformation. Rich in human observation and historical insight, the novel stands as both a literary achievement and a compelling portrait of its era.

NON-FICTION

In Search of the Noble Savage Explorations and the Making of a Myth Töre Sivrioğlu

Social & Cultural History / 216 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Kafka Kitap

For centuries, Western thought has pursued the “Noble Savage,” a romanticised figure embodying an imagined purity beyond the laws, property and constraints of civilisation. Tracing this enduring myth from ancient Mesopotamian tablets to the Age of Exploration, Töre Sivrioğlu examines how societies have repeatedly constructed the “other” from Enkidu and Rousseau’s pre-property human to Magellan’s “giants” and Montaigne’s “cannibals.” Blending intellectual inquiry with vivid historical storytelling, In Search of the Noble Savage offers a provocative cultural history of mythmaking and the colonial imagination while reconsidering the origins of property, warfare and gendered social order, and challenging modern assumptions about civilisation and human nature.

Töre Sivrioğlu (b. in 1980) is a historian and archaeologist specializing in Protohistory, Asia Minor archaeology, and cultural heritage. He has participated in numerous excavations and conservation projects, and published widely on Iranian, Byzantine, and Islamic art and history.

Oh No, I'm Divorced! Özgür Uçanok

Relationships & Personal Development / 168 Pages / Published: 2026 /
Publisher: Nemesis Kitap

Some stories begin with a wedding; others begin again with a signature. Oh No, I'm Divorced! is a courageous and deeply honest collection of real-life accounts from people who have experienced the emotional upheaval of divorce. Through stories of fractured relationships, broken hearts, unfinished dreams and difficult decisions, the book explores what happens when a bond once believed to be permanent begins to fall apart, and when what appears to be an ending reveals itself as the collapse of an illusion. Candid, moving and ultimately empowering, these personal narratives illuminate the many faces of separation while following individuals as they confront loss, rediscover their identities and learn to rebuild their lives. Challenging the idea that divorce represents failure, the book presents it as a possible turning point: not simply the loss of another person, but the beginning of finding one's way back to oneself.

Özgür Uçanok (b. in 1975) has worked in civil society since 1999, focusing on social responsibility, public awareness and initiatives supporting women's economic participation. Trained in divorce counselling and currently studying family counselling, she founded the Oh No, I'm Divorced! platform in 2019 to provide a supportive space where people experiencing divorce can share their stories.

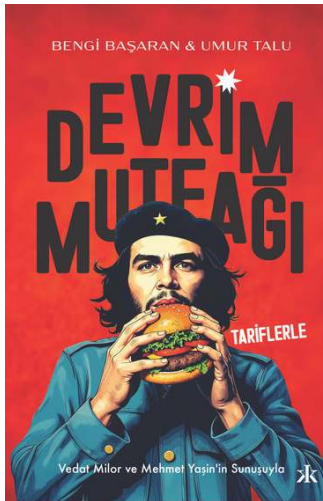

Being A Woman in Antiquity

Asuman Kafaoğlu Bük

Mythology & Gender Studies / 176 Pages / Published: 2026 / Publisher: Kafka Kitap

For thousands of years, mythology and art history have portrayed women through the fears, desires and rigid conventions of the male gaze as seductive sinners, destructive sorceresses or silent figures confined to the margins. In Being a Woman in Antiquity, Asuman Kafaoğlu-Bük turns her attention to these overshadowed voices, stripping mythology's female protagonists of the labels imposed on them by patriarchal civilisations. From Eve and Medea to Penelope, Helen and Venus, she revisits familiar myths to reveal complex, vivid women shaped by their flaws, anger, passions and broken hearts. Insightful and liberating, the book challenges centuries-old stereotypes and invites readers to reconsider some of humanity's most enduring legends from a fresh, female-centred perspective.

Asuman Kafaoğlu Bük (b. in 1959) is a writer, translator and literary critic who studied philosophy at California State University, Long Beach, and later taught philosophy and aesthetics at several leading Turkish universities. She has written extensively on literature and art and is the author of The Art of Literature and The Woman in the Painting: Book-Loving Women in Art History.

The Revolutionary Kitchen

Bengi Başaran & Umur Talu

Cultural History / 236 Pages / Published: 2025 / Publisher: Kafka Kitap

The Revolutionary Kitchen explores revolutions and political struggles through the kitchens, meals and dining tables of history, revealing how food intersects with power, resistance, deprivation, privilege and hope. Moving from homes, prisons and places of exile to military camps, communal canteens and political banquets, it brings together figures including Lenin, Trotsky, Emma Goldman, Gandhi, Mao, Fidel Castro, Che Guevara, Atatürk and prominent Turkish revolutionaries. Drawing on historical and culinary sources, the book offers an intimate alternative to conventional political biography, accompanying its protagonists' transformative ideas with the dishes, drinks and recipes associated with their lives.

Bengi Başaran is a writer and academic with a PhD in Art History from Istanbul Technical University. She works across publishing, contemporary art, and gender studies, and contributes regularly to T24 and leading cultural journals.

Umur Talu is an award-winning journalist and author who has held senior editorial roles at major Turkish newspapers. A columnist for T24 and documentary writer, he is recognized for his contributions to press freedom and media ethics in Turkey.

Dissolution, Division, Disintegration:

Understanding Dissociation and Dissociative Disorders

Prof. Dr. Lütfullah Beşiroğlu

Psychology / 432 Pages / Published: 2024 / Publisher: Epsilon

Dissociation is a universal response to trauma that can disrupt an individual's sense of being a whole and unified self. Examining the phenomenon through psychological, neurobiological, philosophical, cultural and historical perspectives, Prof. Dr Lütfullah Beşiroğlu reveals the shared dissociative mechanisms underlying experiences ranging from daydreaming, trance, hypnosis and mystical states to amnesia, alienation, psychosis and self-harm. Drawing on films, literature and remarkable real-life stories, the book asks why the human mind sometimes needs to escape knowledge and deceive itself in order to survive. Both comprehensive and accessible, this original work helps readers understand experiences that may otherwise seem inexplicable and offers valuable insight into trauma, dissociative disorders and the individual journey towards healing.

Özgür Uçanok (b. in 1975) has worked in civil society since 1999, focusing on social responsibility, public awareness and initiatives supporting women's economic participation. Trained in divorce counselling and currently studying family counselling, she founded the Oh No, I'm Divorced! platform in 2019 to provide a supportive space where people experiencing divorce can share their stories.

To Love, to Be Loved, and Sexuality

Nihan Kaya

Psychology / 320 Pages / Published: March 2026 / Publisher: Okuyan Us

Based on Nihan Kaya's research at UCL's Psychoanalysis Department, the book combines psychoanalysis, neuroscience and developmental psychology to explore how our earliest relationships shape the ways we love, form attachments and experience desire. Examining the emergence of the self, our unconscious femininity and masculinity, and the lasting influence of infancy and childhood, Kaya makes object relations theory accessible through a clear yet literary approach. The book presents sexuality as a mirror of the self while helping readers recognise, and potentially transform, the emotional patterns shaping their adult lives.

Nihan Kaya (b. in 1979) graduated from Boğaziçi University and holds an MA from the University of Essex's Centre for Psychoanalytic Studies. She completed her PhD at King's College London and is currently pursuing a second PhD at University College London (UCL)
