As the elderly woman became unable to work, Hanako found a job in town to support her grandmother.

Every morning she woke up with the sun and in the evening hurried back home before it was too late.

Hanako, who was very kind-hearted and polite, was also very curious about everything around her.

During the hour-long journey from the village to the town, she would help fallen birds back into their nests, smell the flowers, greet everyone, and play with the squirrels in the trees.

When she reached halfway, a huge cedar tree would greet her. This tree was incredibly lonely.
