They were white, very, very white.
WHITE loved all the colors. All of them.
"The world would be so boring without colors," white said.
They couldn't keep that love to themself. They told everyone they met.
They showed them:
"Look at how beautiful the rose in the garden is..."

"And what about the trunk of this plane tree?
I bet nobody knows this, but that butterfly is the prettiest in the whole world! Did you see how the duck in the lake sparkles when it flaps its wings?"

There was just one color WHITE didn't like:
black, pitch black.
WHITE ran away from it.
And black ran after white.
It showed up everywhere...

On the day WHITE was invited to their friend's art exhibition, they got ready excitedly. They wore their nicest white clothes, put on their brightest white hair clip, and slipped their feet into their comfiest white shoes.

As White walked, the almond tree's blossoms amazed them.

They got so lost in looking that they forgot where they were. Suddenly their foot caught, and they fell flat. When they looked back, Black was there. Again. Black had tripped WHITE and made them fall.
