"Come on, Dad, it's story time!" Tina cried, running over to her father.

Her father knew exactly what was coming and smiled.

"Story time... but Tina–style, right?"

Tina had only just started learning how to read, but she still loved it most when her dad read to her.

When her father read aloud, Tina felt as if she turned into a hero inside the stories. She would spend hours in her room dressing up like her favorite fairy-tale characters, inventing games, and turning her toys into heroes too. But heroes of her own kind...

"So, shall we start with your favorite story?" her father asked. He opened the book and began to read:

"Once upon a time, Little Red Riding Hood set off to take a cake her mother had baked to her grandmother. On the way, she met a wicked wolf in the forest..." But just as he was about to continue, Tina did what she did best and leapt out of bed.
