Deep in the river forest lived a teeny-tiny,
super-speedy, very-very-angry little fish.
His name was Pırpır.

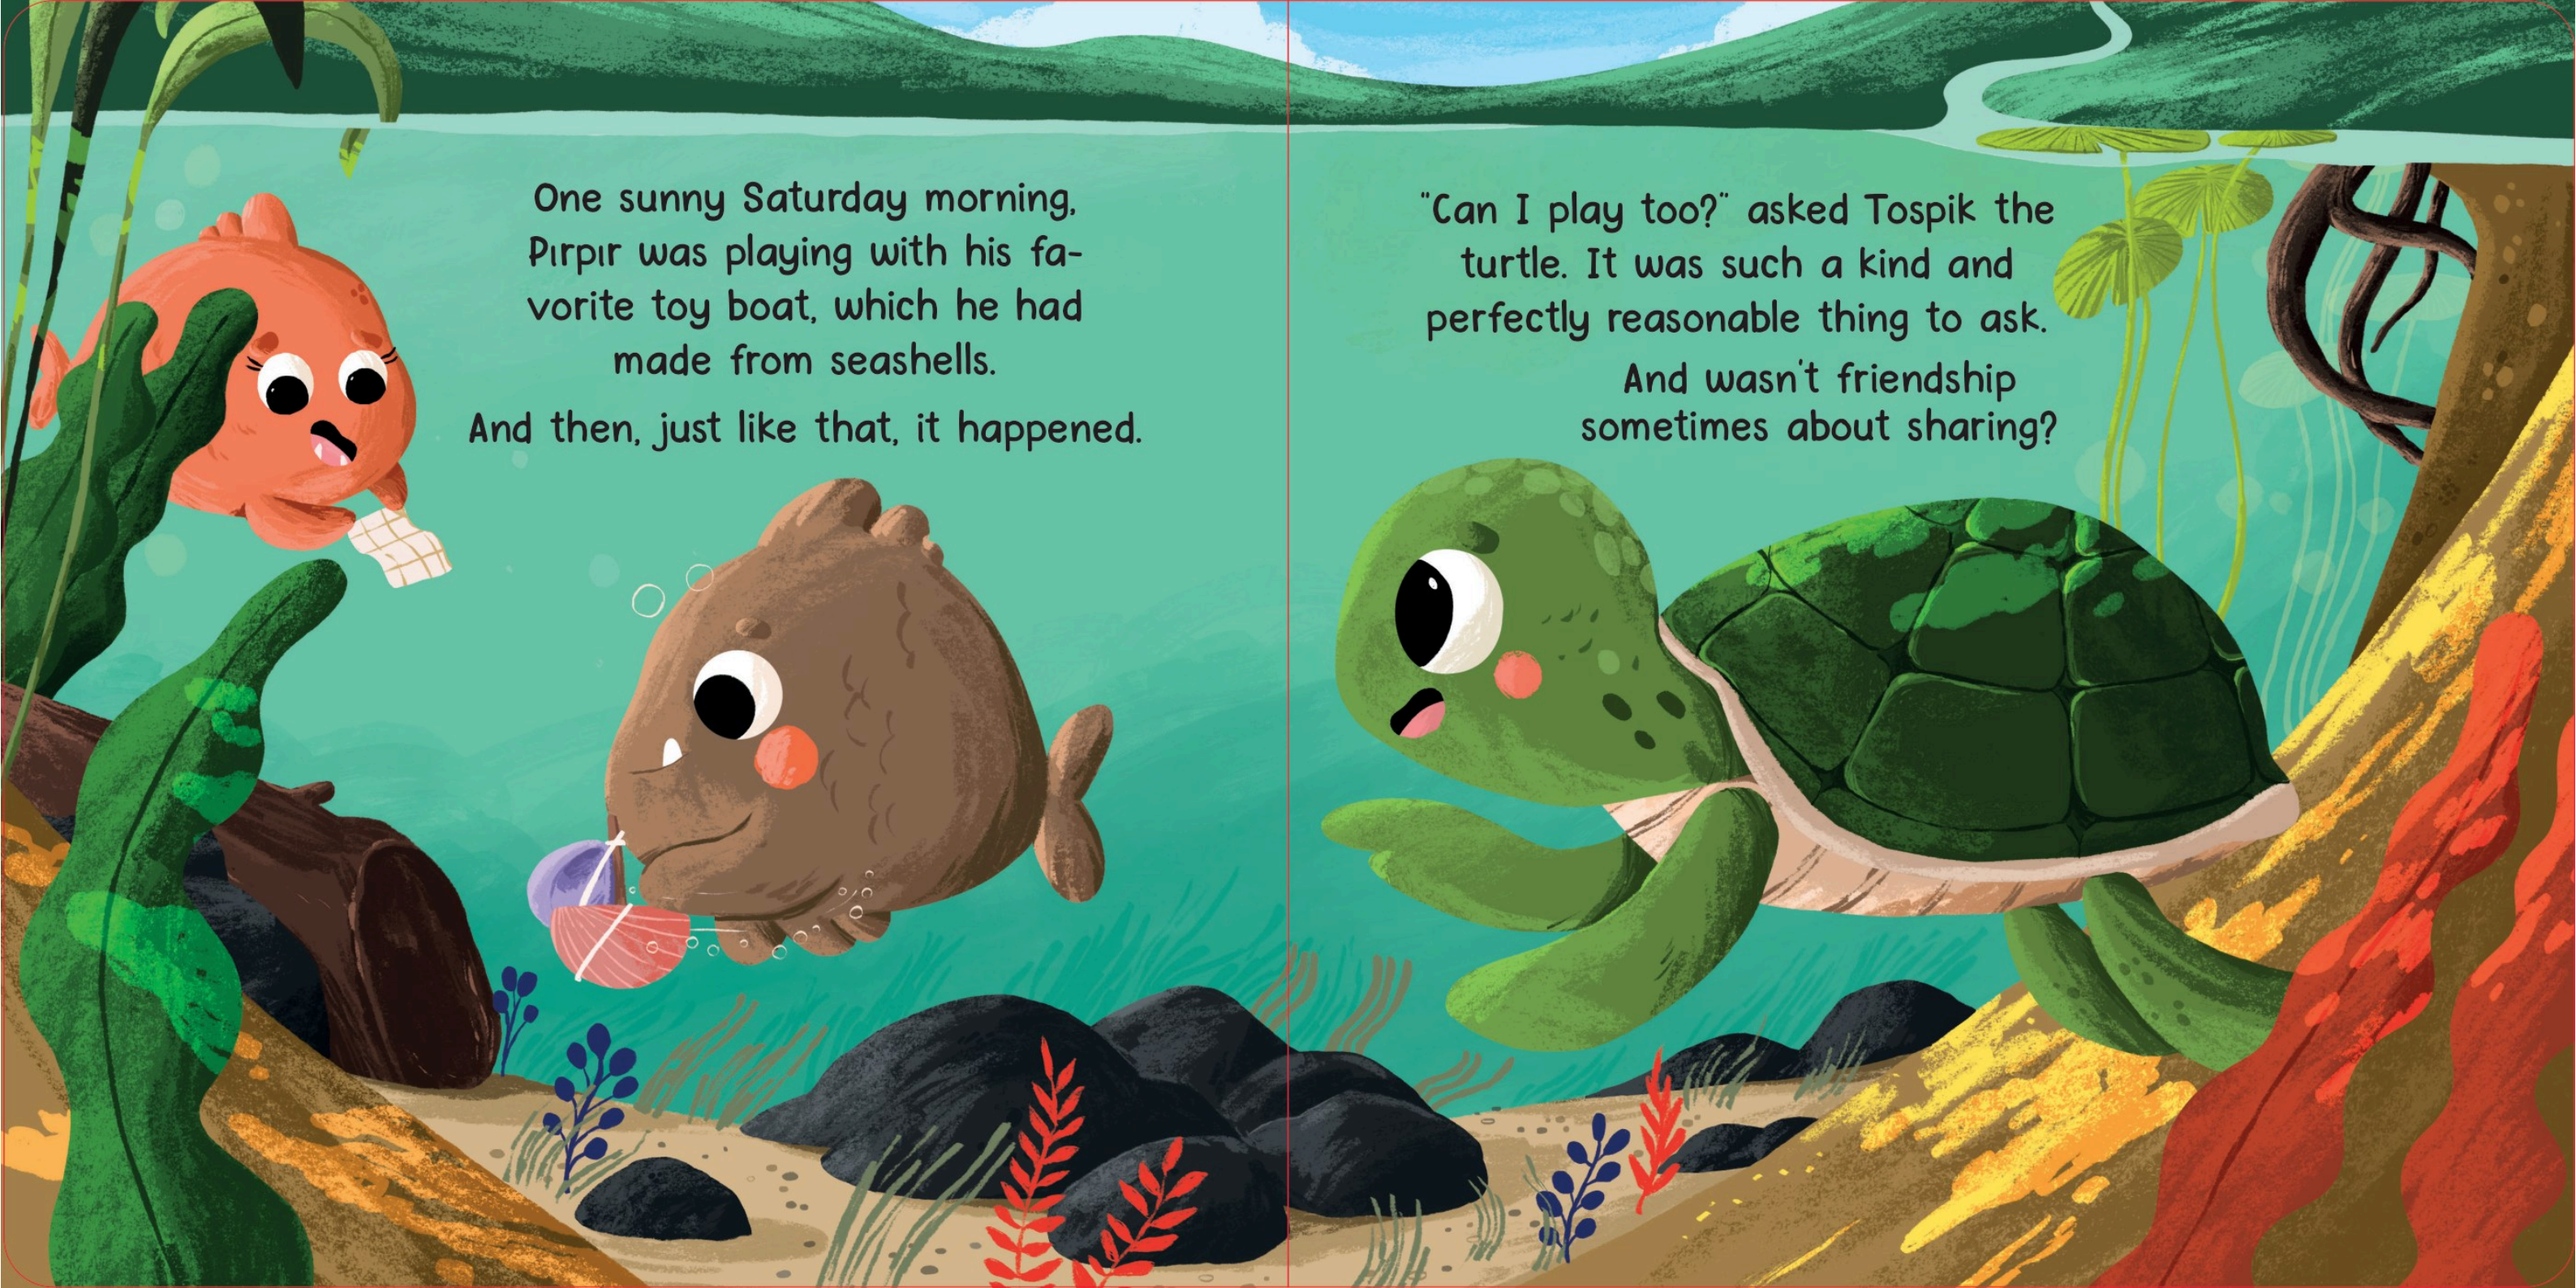

Pırpır was a piranha.

His mommy and daddy had chosen that name together. Because on the day he was born, the moment he popped out
of his egg, he swam away
with a "pırrrrr"

Pırpır wasn't like anyone else.
For example, he didn't like swimming around in a group like his mom and dad...
And the things that made his friends angry didn't easily make him angry at all.
You could never guess what might suddenly make him mad buuut...
the moment a tiny spark lit up, Pırpır's little heart would burst into flames.

One sunny Saturday morning, Pirpir was playing with his favorite toy boat, which he had made from seashells.
And then, just like that, it happened.
"Can I play too?" asked Tospik the turtle. It was such a kind and perfectly reasonable thing to ask.
And wasn't friendship sometimes about sharing?
